7. Notes

- a) All contributions focus on women in economics, with very few relevant exceptions that deal with women and science more generally.
- b) All contributions correspond to a paper, book, book chapter, or publication in other recognized outlet.
- c) For journal articles, a link to the journal or JSTOR is provided. For chapters and books, a link to the publisher or JSTOR is provided, when available. For working papers, a link to the series is provided. Mimeographs are also included when publicly available.
- d) As the literature expands, some sections may develop into separate sections or sub-sections. For instance, the section on ‘Undergraduate education’ may develop into separate sub-sections on ‘learning economics’ (from a student’s perspective) and ‘teaching economics’ (from an instructor’s perspective). Likewise, the section on ‘Publications and other professional activities’ may develop into sub-sections on conferences, grants, etc.
